Although it still could happen, it is probably masked by the dominant antioxidative effect of vitamin C. Indeed, in human plasma taken in vitro, vitamin C acts in the presence of redox-active iron or copper and hydrogen peroxide as an antioxidant which prevents lipid peroxidation and does not promote protein oxidation. Cigarette smokers are known to be exposed to a large number of oxidants. Mean levels of vitamin C in the plasma of smokers are twice lower when compared to nonsmokers. 37 which increases the requirement for vitamin C in smokers. He was missing in action and she never got over the feelings she had at that time.
