Just as in the previous issues of the Catalan Historical Review, we are continuing to offer overviews on the issues that have drawn the attention of a large number of researchers, which pertain to a wide variety of topics and eras from the past. They are jealous of their performances, and the success they may have in speaking, which gives them a pain-till it is over; and this puts them into a hurry of mind, which incapacitates them from governing their voice, and keeping it under that due regulation which perhaps they proposed to themselves before they began to speak.

Aratra Pentelici, Seven Lectures on the Elements of Sculpture Given before the University of Oxford in Michaelmas Term, 1870*Annotated)

The first chapter, "Reading," focuses on the literate practices of the women in Shakespeare Clubs and illustrates the clubs' abilities to empower women through public speech and critical analysis. Vijayabaskar eds.
